About the Contributors

John C. Davis is a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Political Science at the University of Missouri–Columbia. His research interests include political parties, state politics, and legislative behavior. He received his master’s degree in Political Science from the University of Arkansas-Fayetteville in 2011.

Mitchell Goist is a Ph.D. candidate in Political Science and African Studies at Pennsylvania State University. His research focuses on public goods provision in developing countries. Specifically, he is interested in the intersection of government favoritism and ethnic politics. He received his B.A. in International Relations from Hendrix College.

Donald M. Gooch is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Stephen F. Austin State University. He studies public law, the federal court system, and American politics. His research agenda includes political polarization, behavior of the Supreme Court, campaign finance regulation, civic education, formal theory, and the spatial theory of voting. He received his M.A. in Political Science from the University of Arkansas-Fayetteville in 2002 and his Ph.D. in Political Science from the University of Missouri-Columbia in 2012.

Kiril Kolev is an Assistant Professor of Politics and International Relations at Hendrix College. His research focuses on election quality in a comparative perspective. He is particularly interested in the interaction between ethno-cultural diversity, formal political institutions, socio-economic inequality, and electoral integrity. He received his Ph.D. in Comparative Politics from Duke University and a B.A. in Economics from Whittier College.

Samuel Lucas McMillan is an Associate Professor of Political Science at Lander University. His research interests include American foreign policy, US state politics, federalism, international political economy, and European politics. He is author of The Involvement of State Governments in U.S. Foreign Relations (Palgrave Macmillan, 2012) as well as articles in Foreign Policy Analysis, International Interactions, and International Studies Perspectives. He is also the former president of the South Carolina Political Science Association.

Chapman Rackaway is a Professor of Political Science at Fort Hays State University. He teaches in the Political Management concentration for students seeking to become political professionals. His research focuses on campaign processes: strategy, message, professionalism, social media, and paid media. He publishes monthly newspaper columns as part of the Insight Kansas consortium. He received his M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Missouri-Columbia.

Timothy S. Rich is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Western Kentucky University. His primary research focuses on electoral politics, with a regional focus on East Asia, while his secondary research focuses on North Korea politics. He has published in Legislative Studies Quarterly, PS, Japanese Journal of Political Science, Representation, Korea Observer, and Issues & Studies. He received his Ph.D. from Indiana University in 2012.
